When this fleet was equipped for sea, it carried 8376 men.
In the year 1581, the shipping and sailors employed in England amounted to 72,450 tons, and 14,295 seamen.

No. II.

THE Royal Navy at the death of King James I. consisted of 62 sail.

Money expended for the use of the navy 50,000l. per annum.

No. III.

THE Royal Navy when King Charles I. was dethroned, in the year 1642, consisted of 82 sail. In the year 1654, during the civil war, its expences amounted to 850,610*l.* and in the year 1660, at the restoration of King Charles II. its tonnage was 62,594.

No. IV.

An Abstract of the Royal Navy in the Month of August, 1678, in the Reign of Charles II.

Fourth	33	6460
Fifth	12	1400
Sixth	7	423
Fireships	6	340
Total		18,323

These were actually on service, besides a number of hired armed vessels. Eleven capital ships had been newly launched, and nineteen on the stocks; the whole making the navy to consist of 113 sail. In the year 1679 the number on service was only 76.

Rates.	Number.
First	1
Second	3
Third	15
Fourth	30
Fifth	12
Sixth	15

Total 76 carrying 1204 men.

At the death of King Charles II. the navy had been so much neglected that there were only 24 ships at sea, none above a fourth rate, and not more than 3070 seamen employed. The 30 new ships were suffered to rot in the harbours, out of which they had never stirred, and were in danger of sinking at the moorings.

Note. The Cæsar was the first British ship of war launched to mount 80 guns on two decks.

The Anson, Indefatigable and Magnanime of 64 guns each, were in the year 1794 cut down to frigates. They mounted 26 twenty-four pounders on the main deck, 18 twelve pounders on the quarter deck and forecastle, and 4 forty-two pound carronades.

They were at first equipped with 50 gun ships masts, yards, &c. but afterwards took on board those of a 64.

* Single decked frigates.

In all 63 ships of the line, and 4484 men.

The Count D'Etrees who was coming from Toulon, with a strong squadron to join Tourville, met with a heavy gale of wind in passing the Straits of Gibraltar, which so disabled and scattered his fleet, that they were obliged to put into the different ports on the coast of France: but for this accident the French would have been equal, if not superior, to the combined fleet.

It was intended for the ships to anchor in the order of battle as above, but the St. Albans not having brought up near enough to the shore to prevent the enemy from passing between it and the fleet, she became the 4th ship from the Van; many of the Rear having also pushed on, passed their station; anchored in the line ahead, as follows, which on the 26th was changed to the form of an obtuse angle, by the seven rear ships taking their stations towards the town of Basseterre.

Captains Samuel Hood and Isaac Coffin served as volunteers on board the Barfleur.
